FROM SHIRLEY'S FRAME...

Just a quick message as I have a lot to share from others; In our January meeting we discussed and agreed to a process of handling other's estates and downsizing distributions. If the persons wish to give us a flyer with items for sale, we will pass that on to our membership via email. Today we do not have the wherewithal to set up sales for each request. We are a non-profit organization and will accept donations. If needed, we can issue a receipt to the donor. If you have any questions about this, please let me know. We did not vote; it was an agreement of the group at this time. In the future we may change our mind.

February's meeting is a hands on to help our two major events that are occurring back to back in May! The Farm Park show (with the Alphabet pieces) and our hook in with the Mats to give away as door prizes Kelly and Tena's teams will be there to show where and how you can help. We will also have the oriental rug to work on. I really want to encourage those primitive hookers to try it out. There is a specific style to hooking an oriental pattern no matter the size of the noodle.

Every few years we need to be reminded of an Artist's right to the ownership of their intellectual property. This for us means patterns. I have copied Kris Miller's blog post (with her permission) regarding this. She has a series in March 2017 regarding copyright. Please check out her blogs for a lot of information on this subject. I always admire my artist friends, and realize they have to pay rent too. Keep on Hooking, Shirley (copyright article continued on page 3)

From Kris Miller's Blog March 20,2017
<https://spruceridgestudios.blogspot.com/>

"There is nothing so fraught with controversy than to have a discussion with a rug hooker about copyright laws. Let me say first that I'm not a lawyer, I don't have a law degree, and I am not an expert about copyright laws. I have, however, had several discussions with attorneys about copyright law and I have done enough research to feel fairly comfortable when talking about it. A great resource that I often refer to is the Copyright Office website at www.copyright.gov. Please use it as a reference if there is any doubt. Another great book to read is Copyright Plain & Simple by Cheryl Besenjak.

So, there you have it...my disclaimer before I discuss copyright vs. rug hooking etiquette!

Copyright is the legal protection of one's intellectual rights and it protects original works including music, writing, artistic works (including pictorial and sculptural works), movies, photography, and even computer software. Here is a link to general copyright information (really great information for inquiring minds):<https://www.copyright.gov/help/faq/faq-general.html>

Basically, there are two important facts for rug hookers to remember:

1. Copyright laws cover the life of the creator + 70 years.
2. Anything published before 1923 is in the public domain (no copyright)

So...you are wondering how this applies to rug camp etiquette? Well, it works like this:

You cannot hook Sponge Bob Square Pants at camp or anywhere else, even for personal use (yes, this is true. Sponge Bob belongs to Nickelodeon. I really did have to investigate this). You also can't copy/hook The Simpsons, or Winnie The Pooh, or anything else that is licensed by a corporation (unless you get permission). This includes sport team logos because they have strict licensing rules. You can't create designs by copying images/photos you find on the internet or Pinterest or Facebook or Ebay or Etsy without finding out if they belong to someone. In other words, most pictures and images you find on the internet are copyrighted and to use them would be an infringement when you use them without permission.

I realize I am not the police when it comes to this, but I can tell you that you cannot hook these things in my classroom. Nor can you hook any design in my class that appears to be a copyright infringement. And I hope you don't do it in any other teacher's class either.

There are lots of really, really wonderful rug hooking patterns out there by many talented designers. I like when my students pick one of the patterns from my website because I am familiar with them. But I never, ever limit what a student can hook in my class to just my patterns, because of all the other wonderful choices (I always welcome any primitive/wide cut pattern in my class).

If you have an eye on a design that you've seen on the internet, or in a book, on a note card, etc, please don't make the assumption that you can copy it for rug hooking! Do your best to find out who owns the design and ask for permission. It's not out of the question. I've heard of many artists who will allow you to do this for personal use. Ask. I love the adage "the answer is always no unless you ask!" If you get permission, make sure it's in writing so you have proof that you can legally use the design. But what if they say no? Or what if you don't get an answer? Just move on. Think of all the other terrific design possibilities and find something else to hook. It's the right thing to do.

One other thing....just because you purchase/own the artwork, whether it be a painting, note card, etc, it does not give you the right to copy it. The creator still owns the intellectual rights/copyright.

Remember: lifetime of the artist plus 70 years.

Can you copy an old postcard, poster, or greeting card? Yes, as long as the design is pre-1923.

Can you copy an antique or vintage rug design? Yes, as long as the design is pre-1923.

Many pattern designers do offer patterns from antique rug designs but beware! If they have added a few extra elements (maybe a different border) or put their own spin on the design by adding a few extra doodles, they have essentially created a copyrightable design, and of course you can't copy that! I often take my own pictures of antique rugs when I'm traveling somewhere or visiting an antique store. When you do that, you are using your own photo and adapting the design just as you have seen it.

Complicated? Confusing? You bet! Will people jump all over me for this? Probably. Is this important to our rug hooking community? Yes, it is. Let's all do the (copy)right thing!"

THANKS to everyone who drew the patterns for the Rug Show kits at the January Guild meeting. They look great, and the patterns are now done!

THANKS, too, to everyone who has donated wool, hooks, and hoops. You have been so generous and thoughtful about your contributions! We'll continue to take contributions of all three at the February Guild meeting for anyone who hasn't yet had a chance to check through their stash.

We're on our way toward making the 50 kits we'll need for the classes. At the February Guild meeting, we'll be cutting the wool. If you bring your cutter and everyone does a little, we can finish it up very quickly and no one is away from their own hooking very long.
